New Poll of Miami Residents Shows City Souring on Trump Administration Actions on the Economy and Immigration Enforcement

BOSTON—A new Suffolk University/WSVN-TV 7 News survey of Miami residents shows the majority-Hispanic/Latino city may be souring on President Donald Trump and his signature policies, including his pledge to grow the economy.

When asked if the economy is worse under President Trump or under former President Joe Biden, 41% responded Trump, while 37% said Biden; one year ago in July 2024, 51% said Biden, while only 28% said Trump.

A majority of Miami survey respondents—52% of whom identified as Hispanic or Latino—also disapproved of the Trump administration's immigration policies. Sixty-one percent of residents said recent ICE enforcement raids have gone too far, while only 6% said they have not gone far enough. About 23% said the raids are just about right.

A majority (59%) of respondents say they oppose the administration's termination of Temporary Protected Status for Haitians living in the United States, with just 24% approving of the move. And 52% of respondents say that the recent deportations of Venezuelans, Cubans, and Argentinians living in Miami make them less likely to support President Trump going forward.

"The Trump administration's actions on these policies are turning off voters, including those in the crucial Hispanic demographic bloc," said Suffolk University Political Research Center (SUPRC) Director David Paleologos.

Among those who voted in the 2024 presidential election, respondents were nearly equally split on whether they had selected Trump (36%) or Democratic challenger Vice President Kamala Harris (37%). But when asked how they would vote if the same election were held today, 35% said they would choose Harris for president, but just 30% said they would choose Trump again.

History of *CityView

In 2021, SUPRC launched its groundbreaking CityView project, a first-of-its-kind series of public opinion polls focused on some of America's largest cities, conducted in partnership with USA TODAY and major regional media outlets like WSVN-TV in Miami.

CityView polls investigate how urban residents feel about their overall quality of life and the top issues their cities are facing. In addition to Miami, SUPRC has conducted CityView polls in Seattle, Dallas, Louisville, Oklahoma City, Los Angeles, Detroit, and Milwaukee.

Methodology

This survey of 500 residents of the City of Miami was conducted July 7-11, and is based on live telephone interviews of adults 18 years of age or older, residing in all five districts in the city. Quota and demographic information—including region, race, and age—were determined from census and American Community Survey data. Surveys were administered in English and Spanish. The margin of sampling error for results based on the total sample is +/- 4.4 percentage points. All surveys may be subject to other sources of error, including but not limited to coverage error and measurement error. Suffolk University poll consultants Brandon Barros, Mia Galego, and Ana Sophia Sleeman contributed to the successful execution of this research. Marginals and full cross-tabulation data are posted on the Suffolk University Political Research Center website.
