

0:01 I'm a trial attorney.
0:02 International advocate.
0:03 I'm a public servant.
0:04 Corporate lawyer.
0:05 I'm a labor and employment attorney.
0:06 An assistant attorney general.
0:08 Corporate attorney here in Boston.
0:09 I've worked twice as a lawyer for the United Nations.
0:12 I'm a Suffolk lawyer.
0:13 I'm a Suffolk lawyer.
0:14 I'm a Suffolk University lawyer.
0:16 I was able to intern at the DA's office and actually prosecute cases for the commonwealth.
0:21 I was able to work for the Attorney General's office after my first year and actually wrote
0:26 decisions that were adopted by the executive administrative agency. Those are the kinds
0:32 of experiences that I came here for, that I wanted to have.
0:35 The professors at Suffolk helped me reach my goals by pushing me. They told me, "If 0:42 there's something you want to do, we'll help you get there."
0:45 In a real world situation, students are put in a position of really taking on that responsibility
0:50 and that accountability to a person. They get a client, they interviewed that person.
0:55 They're the ones in charge.
0:56 It's no secret the world's changed a lot these days. Things are more global. They happen
1:00 faster. The information moves around more quickly and the ability to deliver that information
1:05 is a lot faster. The legal profession has had to change with that.
1:09 In the accelerator practice, students not only learn how to be lawyers, how to interview
1:14 a client, how to appear before a judge, but the business of law, marketing, pricing, legal
1:19 services. So that at the end of three years, they graduate prepared to deliver legal services
1:24 to real people.
1:26 Not only did I get a top rate legal education, but I also developed the personal and professional
1:32 relationships that I will have for the rest of my legal career.
