MAKE YOUR WAY
College is your time to set your goals, and then go after them. Your definition of success will be just as unique as you are. And your opportunities should be as boundless as your ambitions.

At Suffolk University in downtown Boston, you’ll find opportunities to expand your studies and open your world around every corner. You’ll gain new insights in our classrooms—that’s a given. But you’ll also experience your education through internships and hands-on learning in our global city. What you learn here will power your success for years to come.
And that’s not to mention all the amazing new perspectives you’ll get just by studying and living in the center of one of the world’s most innovative, culturally rich, historic, sports championship–winningest, and exciting cities.

At Suffolk, you’ll define your own experience, and we’ll always find a way to help you make your way.
JUST THE RIGHT TIME.
JUST THE RIGHT PLACE.
At Suffolk University, your professors won’t just share facts—they’ll inspire you to think in fresh ways and challenge conventional wisdom. And they’ll activate their professional networks to help you build yours.

Get ready to think outside the classroom, too. At Suffolk, lectures come to life all around Greater Boston. Present your consumer research to execs who need help reaching the Gen Z market. Analyze water samples from the Charles River. Suffolk students do all this and more. How will you make your mark?

And while you gain field-specific knowledge, you’ll learn how to make yourself heard. Suffolk students excel at giving presentations, communicating and collaborating with their peers, solving problems, and thinking critically. With these key skills, you’ll be well-prepared for jobs that don’t even exist yet.

If you’ve got the drive, there’s a place for you at Suffolk. Are you the first in your family to go to college? Are you a veteran? Did you grow up in the inner city or a small town? You’ll fit right in.

Gabriela Soto Cotto had a 4.0 high school GPA and a semester at the University of Puerto Rico under her belt. So why did she leave everything to push carts at a wholesale store in Massachusetts for seven months?

“The hope to do a lot more than I would have been able to if I stayed on that little 35-x-100-mile island,” she says. “All I needed was to save up to pay for school.”

A random stranger encouraged her to research Suffolk. Then she discovered the interdisciplinary politics, philosophy, and economics (PPE) degree. “This is me in a major,” she remembers thinking. “I question everything.” Gabriela registered for a transfer on-the-spot decision day.

Now a PPE major and honors student, she’s traded shopping carts for choreography with the Pasión Latina dance team. Plus, she’s a modern language assistant in the Language Lab, helping students with their Spanish speaking and writing skills.

Gabriela, Class of 2021, loves the global diversity here and learns from it. “You become friends with someone,” she says, “and you start sharing stories and learning what life is like outside your bubble. It’s humbling to put yourself in other people’s shoes. We all deserve the same respect and empathy.”

Whatever you major in, Suffolk classes are purposely small, so you’ll forge strong connections with your classmates and professors.

You’ll master innovative concepts and new ways of thinking. And since our programs are designed to address contemporary challenges, integrate service learning, and promote creativity, you’ll be prepared for success.

Suffolk students give back—not because community service looks good on a resume, but because they care. And our service opportunities are just as diverse as the students who build houses for the homeless on their semester breaks, help immigrants file their taxes pro bono, volunteer with children through Jumpstart, and more.

Gabriela wants to be an environmental lawyer. “I have a long time to live,” she says, “and I want a planet to live in.”
Club fellowship back home taught her how to organize environmental projects. She then started a nonprofit to help provide clean energy to a low-income community devastated by Hurricane Maria.

Now she’s deciding whether to apply to law school right away or first earn a master’s degree in data analytics. “My journey has been different,” she says, “and that makes it special.”

Suffolk was founded on the values of access and opportunity more than a century ago, and we’re true to our roots. This mission has transformed the lives of our 82,000 alumni and their communities. It will change yours, too.

Our World of Opportunities

GET WISE TO

THE WO
Our planet is more interconnected than ever. To really thrive in today’s world—and tomorrow’s—you’ll need to appreciate and navigate its many cultures. The Suffolk community is global. Our faculty and students come from around the world to teach and learn here in Boston. That means you’ll glean new, eye-opening insights from your professors and classmates alike.

It was freezing when Tristen Herbert and a friend broke out their best suits, printed out their resumes and business cards, and visited Boston’s top employers in search of internships as freshmen. “And it worked!” he says. “I ended up getting an internship with Placester in the Financial District.”

Tristen, Class of 2020, traveled from his Caribbean home in St. Kitts and Nevis to study global business and finance here. “Suffolk is basically the size of my island’s population,” he jokes. “I told my friends that I’d never seen snow. On the first big snow day, they organized a snowball fight for me on Boston Common.”

Extremely shy when he arrived on campus, Tristen changed all that by the end of his first semester. His secret? Getting involved on campus. “It helped me with my speaking, listening, and presentation skills,” he says. He and his friends even founded one of Suffolk’s newest organizations, the Fundamental Brotherhood Society, which he calls “a moral guide and support system. Associate Dean of Students Sean Newton is our advisor and he believed in us,” Tristen says. “I’ll go to his office at least once a month to just talk.”

You’ll get a whole new worldview on our diverse campus. We also make it easy to make your way almost anywhere on the map, starting with our Global Gateway Program, which introduces you to our campus in Madrid, Spain, as a freshman. You can go on travel seminars in the world’s business hubs (and meet with Suffolk alumni working abroad) and have the chance to study abroad on nearly every continent. You might explore leadership and local culture in Barbados with the Journey Leadership Program or volunteer in Southeast Asia over spring or winter break.

Now, Tristen has a United Kingdom stamp in his passport, thanks to his summer finance internship with Bloomberg in London. “I want to develop businesses all over the world,” he says. “Understanding British culture, seeing what their business ethics are and how they operate will help me in the future.”

The world needs farsighted, open-minded, culturally aware thinkers. The question isn’t just how you’ll make your mark at Suffolk and after graduation; it’s where.
We have so many study abroad programs, they can’t fit on this page. They include:

It actually was a dark and stormy day. Yasir Batalvi took cover under a convenient awning. Realizing he was standing outside Suffolk, he went in to explore the Government Department. And that’s when he ran into Associate Professor Brian Conley. “I was just a prospective applicant,” Yasir says, “and we ended up chatting for the next hour.” Conley’s been his mentor ever since.

Yasir, a government major in the Class of 2020, participated in Campaign Lab, which Conley co-directs. “It was pretty phenomenal,” he says. “You get real-world experience and make contacts at site visits. What are you supposed to do at 8 a.m. on the weekend before an election? Campaign Lab will teach you.”

That’s the kind of intel he uses as campaign manager for Jean Bradley Derenoncourt, BA ’16, who’s running for mayor in nearby Brockton. Conley put the two in touch; now they hope the rest is political history.

This isn’t Yasir’s first taste of professional politics either. “I worked as an organizer for Hillary Clinton’s campaign my freshman year,” he says, “down the street at the Massachusetts Democrats’ headquarters. That’s just one of the experiences I wouldn’t have had if I wasn’t at Suffolk.”

Suffolk’s College of Arts & Sciences’ (CAS) programs will spark your interest, your curiosity, and your intellectual passion. You won’t just read about the American Revolution. You’ll follow the Freedom Trail that unwinds just outside our doors and explore historic sites. Learn to balance equations in our labs; then, intern at a world-class biomedical firm nearby. Those are just two examples from so many others.

Whatever you major in, you’ll study with faculty members who possess a world of knowledge and can’t wait to share their insights—and their professional contacts—with you.

Create new worlds—with words or design software or both. Intern on Beacon Hill or Capitol Hill. Break into broadcast news. You might even save the world, thanks to environmental policy expertise.

You can learn to do all that and more at Suffolk.
MAKE SUCCESS YOUR

If you think of college as the time to get down to business, the Sawyer Business School is for you.
Vincent LePore heard about Hannover Re’s global competition through Suffolk’s Career Development Center. “This big insurance company was recruiting teams from the United States, Dublin, Berlin, and Johannesburg to create something new using technology,” he says. “And I was like, ‘Yeah, insurance sounds boring.’ It ended up being exactly what I want to do.”

Not only did Vinny, BSBA ’18, get named to the U.S. team, he was the only member still in school. Between classes, he walked from campus to his team’s Downtown Crossing workspace. Having grown up outside the gates of Logan Airport, he took his first-ever flight—a nonstop to Germany—for a crash course in insurance. He returned to present the team’s idea to Hannover Re six months later.

Vinny discovered his dream career along the way. “I knew I liked piecing puzzles together, though, and risk management in insurance is about solving problems and being innovative,” he says.

“Risk management in insurance is about solving problems and being innovative,” he says.

Your Suffolk business degree will ground you in everything you need to know for a solid career foundation. Depending on your major, get ready to break down big data, create multichannel marketing strategies, manage wealth assets, or take an entirely unexpected direction.

Our faculty members practice in their fields. From them, you’ll learn how business really gets done. You’ll also learn from area executives who bring their C-suite business challenges to campus for you to solve.

“I learned a lot from my professors,” Vinny says. “Anne Brensley’s business writing class wasn’t structured; you had to think things through. And I took every class I could with Mike Eisenstein. Now we grab coffee all the time. It was awesome to have professors who were living the stuff they taught.”

Whichever goals you pursue at Suffolk, you’ll study within a mile of all of the Big Four accounting firms, just a few blocks from Boston’s Financial District power players like Fidelity Investments and Morgan Stanley, and a quick walk or T ride to the city’s top marketing agencies, healthcare organizations, and tax firms. You can even expand your business worldview on one of our Travel Seminars.

Vinny’s now at Energetic Insurance, the insurtech start-up where he interned as a student before becoming its first full-time employee. “The commonality between these opportunities is that they’re all 5–10 minutes from Suffolk,” he says. “That’s the game-changer.”

Talk about positioning yourself for success.

Maybe you’ve already experienced life abroad with your family or friends. Or perhaps you’ve never traveled farther than one town over and can’t wait for a wider worldview. Or you might just really revel in new cultures and experiences.

Maya Srivastava has that global curiosity and the tattoo to prove it. She has a map of the whole world on her wrist.

“My family started traveling when I was 11,” the Class of 2021 global business and marketing major says. “We went to India because my family is from there. The day I stepped off the plane, I was like, ‘This is what I want to do. I want to travel and see the world.’” Maya got her worldly tattoo the day after her 18th birthday.

If you want a truly life-changing academic opportunity, join the select group of students who start their
You can soak up artistic masterpieces at El Prado. Witness the Spanish Senate in action. Or map the stars on the Canary Islands.

You’ll find a close-knit community at Suffolk Madrid. Maya’s welcome trip set the tone for her spring semester in Spain. “It’s a whole weekend,” she says. “No one sleeps at all; you just get to know people.” On that trip she also climbed the narrow spiral steps to the roof of a local church. “You could see all the buildings and then it was just fields and fields of grass. I’ve never been more in awe of nature in my life than when I was standing on top of a cathedral in Spain during sunset. It was the definition of golden hour.”

She even faced down a baby bull in the ring on a Suffolk Madrid outing. “The second the bull sees you, it just runs,” she says. “I wear my Fitbit all the time. My heart rate was like 175 as I ran to the safety area. It was an experience you’ll never get anywhere else.”

Now that Maya’s back in Boston, her tattoo still inspires her to map out her path in life. “Sometimes I just like to look at it and remember that the world is so big,” she says.

Depending on your major, you can spend up to your first two years of studies in Spain before heading back to Boston. And if you study international relations, there’s no need to ever leave: you can spend all four years at Suffolk Madrid. Sí.

(Si no puedes leer estas palabras, no te preocupes. Suffolk Madrid courses are taught in English—except for Spanish language classes.)
Make your degree work for you and your goals. You can do something different to get even more out of your experience here.
Geraldine Galvis joined Suffolk’s Honors Program while interning in government relations at Boston Children’s Hospital for 25 hours a week. She’s also studied abroad in Madrid and Rome, and declared a double major in law (with a paralegal certificate) and government (with a public policy and law concentration).

Geraldine’s honors research project focuses on social media’s effects on young college students’ confidence. “I want to capture why we always try to fake an image for other people when we should just be our true authentic selves and strive for that,” she says.

It’s personal. “To be confident in myself and my work was one of my biggest difficulties,” Geraldine, Class of 2020, says. Growing up in the diverse Boston neighborhoods of Dorchester and Hyde Park, she learned to embrace who she is and where she comes from.

Immersed in her project—while also interning at law firm WilmerHale—she finds support from Suffolk’s honors community. “Whenever I need help with my research, the honors faculty ask, ‘When are you free?’” she says.

Next up? Presenting her findings at the National Collegiate Honors Council Conference in New Orleans and running for student government—for a start.

Boston is constantly evolving and filled with the top names in business, tech, media, the arts, and healthcare. These institutions aren’t just nice-to-have neighbors. They’re longstanding partners that regularly find their next interns—and new hires—at Suffolk University.

Boston’s a great place to find your career. It’s also the ideal city to find yourself.

Run, walk, or just hang out along the Charles River Esplanade. Do your homework at your favorite café. Relax on Boston Common. Discover eye-catching street art. Try new treats from a food truck. Then catch your favorite band. These aren’t just great posts. They could be everything you do on Monday in between interning and writing a paper.

At Suffolk, you’ll do more than learn and live in Boston. You’ll grow into who you want to be.
You won’t be bored here. There’s just too much going on.

“Suffolk is just a really unique location to be at,” says Karine Kanj. “It feels like I belong here. I definitely would not have been able to accomplish all that I have somewhere else.”

One of her biggest accomplishments so far? Being elected Student Government Association (SGA) president at the end of her sophomore year.

As a Class of 2021 senator and chair of the Student Affairs Committee, Karine’s become comfortable with public speaking. “I was never this super-outspoken extrovert,” she says. “I’m shocking myself!”

As president, she hopes to help all students feel welcome on campus—something she also does as an orientation leader. A word of her expert advice? Contribute to campus life whether you live on campus or commute (like she does).

“Getting involved has made me more knowledgeable, set my priorities straight, and opened new paths in life for me,” Karine, a government major, says.

She hopes to put Suffolk on a new path, too. Through an internship with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Karine visited three campsites in July 2018 to meet with more than 50 Syrian refugees and hear their individual stories. There, she met a 27-year-old woman who told Karine she’d like to be anything, as long as she could learn to read. “What can I do to better this?” Karine asked herself.

As SGA president, she hopes to unite the entire Suffolk community—especially our sizeable international student population—in giving back to the global community.
“Sponsoring a refugee child in need of education is my number one goal,” Karine says.

“If I keep this momentum going,” she says, “I can only imagine what’s going to happen within the next two years.”

At Suffolk, you can write editorials that get noticed for The Suffolk Journal. Or maybe you’ll sing our alma mater with the Ramifications. Perhaps you’ll rock the runway at the Caribbean Student Network’s annual fashion show. Or network your way to a new internship thanks to your professional association. Maybe you’ll do all of this and be the Rams’ shortstop, too.

The list goes on. And if your dream campus group doesn’t exist yet, we’ll help you start it.

True story: landmarks like Boston Common and the State House line your way to class here. Want to live in an equally prime address? At Suffolk, you can live in one of our perfectly located residence halls or find the neighborhood that works best for you.
‘Suite life’ takes on a whole new meaning at Suffolk. Our residence halls feature all that you might expect, like furniture, air conditioning, and TV and WiFi access. But more than that, you’ll find them in the center of everything: overlooking Boston Common or around the corner from Downtown Crossing’s stores and restaurants or right down the street from our Samia Academic Center.

All of our residence halls are staffed by friendly resident assistants (RAs). Christian Rosado, Class of 2021, is an RA at Smith Hall. For this corporate finance and accounting major, the role is “challenging but also rewarding because you watch people grow,” he says. “Trying to read and understand people are helpful skills in business, and I’ve been able to mentor my residents. I tell them: all the opportunities are here. Where they want to invest their energy and what they want to do depends on them.”

Suffolk Rams

GAME ON

Talent. Determination. Heart. The Suffolk Rams have all three—and they play to win. Whether you compete on one of our NCAA Division III teams or cheer them on, Ram Nation needs you.

Michael Hagopian never stopped being a Ram when the buzzer sounded. Even during the off-season, this captain of the men’s basketball team led by example, continuing to hit the gym and work on his shots. “I think people noticed and they started to follow,” he says.

That leadership and hard work paid off: the Suffolk Rams just had their best basketball season since 1975-76. The secret to their success? Trust. “I always had my team behind me,” he says. “We ate together, walked together; we did it all.”

Michael, BSBA ’19, and his teammates also made sure to support Suffolk’s other NCAA Division III teams together. “We always root for each other in any sport,” he says. “At the end of the day, we’re all playing for the same school.”

A freshman recruit, he loved studying finance and playing so close to the Boston Celtics’ home court at TD Garden. “It definitely wasn’t easy, but it was cool to be a student-athlete,” Michael says. His advice? Don’t do your homework at the last minute.

His newfound time-management skills have come in handy. Michael balanced his honors courses with court time in Boston and beyond. The summer of his junior year, he played on Armenia’s Under 20 team. The following summer, he was invited back to play with the national team.

Now he’s back in Armenia, playing on a professional basketball team. And he already has a plan for his life after athletics. At Suffolk, Michael discovered his love for investment management along with his leadership style. “People have goals,” he says, “but not everybody knows how to manage their money. I like talking to people and genuinely doing what’s best for them.” The secret to his future success: trust. Sound familiar?
